

The Nation, 210 Broadway (P. O. Box 794),

New York, April 9, 1887

Dear Mr. Gray:

As quickly as possible I follow you with the proofs of your most entertaining review of Darwin, hoping that the interval before publication will permit of their return. Please see if I have conjectured the title aright. I do hope it will be in your power to send another paper on the Correspondence.

Prof. Goodale has notified me of your turning over to him the books in hand for notice, & for this service too I am greatly your debtor.

The Nation should already have reached your new address.

I am left to imagine the cause of your going eastward instead of southward for your vacation, but I know that a welcome awaits you at all points of the compass. You have my best wishes for unalloyed pleasures.

With cordial regards to Mrs.
Gray, I remain always,

W. F. Garrison
